THUESTAN EVE. No. SEPT 6, 1900

CZAR MAY DI-CIPLINE AUNT. A special dispatch from Berlin says: "A very serious quarrel has broken out between the Cz ar and his aunt, the Grand Duchess of Wladimir, which has had the result of causing her husband, the Grand Duke, to tender his resignation of his office as Commander of the Metropolitan Military District of St. Petersburg and of the Imperial Guard.

"The woole trouble, which has not only set all Russian society by the ears, but has also perturbed several for igo courts, including that of Emperor Willism, is due to a question of baccarat and roulette.

"Last spring the Czar, alarmed by the extraordinary increase of the scandals at court, in society, in the army and even among high clergy, due to high pay, issued an edict strictly for-high pay, issued an edict strictly for-bidding baccarat or roulette.

"This ukase followed almost im-mediately the startling discovery made by Nicholas that the chapter of one of the principal churches of the metropolis had pawned the church plate and jeweled icons to pay gambling debts contracted at baccarat and roulette. "By the army and clergy the emperor's commands have been obeyed, and baccarat has been stopped at the Yacht and other leading clubs.

"But society has treated the imperial edict with something very much akin to derision, and this largely owing to the attitude adopted by the Grand Duchess Wladimir.

"The latter, a German princess by birth, and the only foreign lady who has declined to change the faith in which she was reared for that of her husband on marrying a Russian grand duke, is passionstely addicted to gambling. "To her is due the introduction of the roulette table as an ar-ticle of furniture in the salous of most of the palaces and mansions of St. Petersburg, and the edict of her nephew in no way modified her openly proclaimed determination to vissit no house and to attend no entertain ment where roulette and baccarat were not provided for her amusement. "As the Grand Duchess is the mos dashing member of the imperial family and he acknowledged leader of S Peter-burg society, from which the Czat and Czarina hold wholly aloof, the grea world of the Russian capital has ingnored the ukase of the Emperor and taken its cue from his aunt.

"On discovering the manner in which his orders were defied and the part which the Grano Duchess has played in the matter, the Czar intimated to her toat unless she set an example of obedience to his behest he would reluctantly re compelled to visit her with a pubhe t see of its otspleasure by bani-hthe her for a time from court and deprivles and of imperial honors,"
